The original series aired from October 6, 2004 to October 26, 2016 on Syfy. The original show spanned 11 seasons with 230 episodes, excluding 10 specials. Revived in early 2019, the show aired its 12th season in 11 episodes, not including two specials, from August 21, 2019 to October 30, 2019 on A&E. Season 13 will premiere on April 8, 2020. The program included Jason Haws and Grant Wilson, who formed the Atlantic Supernatural Society (TAPS) team of supernatural researchers to explore places reported as haunted. The two worked as plumbers for Roto-Roper while working as supernatural researchers at night. As of season 12, the resurrected series features Wilson and a new investigative team that has no apparent connection to TAPS, although the series still maintains the same format and produces and often refers to previous episodes. Initially produced over 10 episodes as a docu-soap, the show later shifted to a more documentary focus. Episodes of The Ghost Hunters show the crew reportedly going to haunted locations across the United States, with several investigations in Ireland, the UK and Canada in previous seasons. The latter concept led to the show's first spin-off, Ghost Hunters International, in 2008, which often included ghost hunter researchers in leading roles and guests, including Havas and Wilson. A second spin-off, Ghost Hunters Academy (2009-10), had TAPS members Dave Tango and Steve Gonsalves training potential researchers in a competitive format. In addition, the annual Halloween special aired live from 2005 to 2011 and guests are famous and interactive. The series is popular on reality TV as a natural and ghost hunting, and some members of the show continued to appear on their TV shows. The premise Jason Haws and Grant Wilson, along with other teammates belonging to the group they founded, the Atlantic Supernatural Society (TAPS), are exploring places of interest using various electronic equipment, which they believe is capable of detecting supernatural activity. The two originally worked as plumbers for Roto-Roller as day labor while exploring places at night. [1] Investigative procedures This section needs additional verification quotes. The team then setting up electronic equipment in the seemingly supernatural hotspots. The TAPS team then spends several hours taking electromagnetic field and temperature readings, recording audio for EVPs and filming using digital video cameras. Many times, they will even try to verbally lure the spirits into reacting, while recording. The team then spends several days analyzing all the data for evidence of possible all-natural activity. A few days after reviewing the information, Havas Wilson discusses their findings with the owners of the location site, offers suggestions for dealing with any alleged activity, and answer any questions the owner may have. TAPS members say they do not believe that any phenomenon captured is evidence of the supernatural and sometimes provide reasonable explanations such as cold spots that may be wind windows, strange noises that may be a batting branch or running through walls, moving objects which may have been accidentally encountered or fused, or phantom lights that can be reflections of light from a passing vehicle. Since the series began airing, TAPS has recorded thousands of hours of audio and video data. Most investigations, according to TAPS, increase cold with very little, if any, psynatural activity occurring. However, the ghost hunters claim to have some decent recordings of moving objects, mysterious lights, strange times, and dark figures expressed to the camera and highlighted at the end of the show. Science fiction initially classified the show as a docu-soap. [2] In addition to the investigative aspect, the program also presented personal conflicts and relationships between TAPS team members. Parts of the episodes depict Haws and Wilson involved in their plumbing work or personal lives, but that varies by chapter and isn't always included. As the series progressed, however, aspects of behind-the-scenes and docu-soaps narrowed, and in season five the show focused mainly on investigations, with almost none of the docu-soap material that had characterized previous episodes. Equipment used during investigations, taps ghost hunters team use various equipment, including digital thermometers, EMF meters, thermographic and night vision cameras, handheld and static digital video cameras, digital audio recorders, and laptops. [3] The team also conducted experiments, in at least one episode, with Monet Geiger during their investigation to see if he would record unusual readings. Starting in season three, the team used a K-2 gauge (or K-II), a type of EMF gauge that uses Nori's series born to measure the power of an energy field of a numeric LCD screen. During manson's murder investigation, in particular, the team used a K-2 meter in an attempt to get yes and no responses to verbal questions posed to the alleged entity in the room. In edith wharton estate's case of season five, the group introduced two new pieces of equipment: one is a custom-made geophone, which identifies vibrations and flashes a series of LED lights that measure vibration intensity; The second is a new EMF detector that makes sound humming when in the presence of an electromagnetic field, and a stronger, louder estate is humming. In the episode, the geophones were captured on video flashing to vibrations of what sounded like footsteps on the floor, even though no one was allegedly in the room. Other equipment not usually displayed on the screen are an ion generator, a device that moves the air with electricity and lighting to help the winds manifest, and the White Noise Generator, an audio device that makes static background noise, is a theory to act as a catalyst for helping entities perform EVPs. [7] From the beginning, the series found an audience for a combination of ultranatural exploration and personal drama. It has since been installed on NBC Universal's sister cable channel Oxygen and will also air on Canadian cable network OLN. In the early appearances, TAPS was headquartered in a trailer located behind Jason Haws' house, and they drove one white van for questioning. Within one season, they had The entire operation to front a store in Warwick, Rhode Island, and acquired a number of new TAPS vehicles. In addition to their successful television venture, TAPS operates a website where they share their ghost-hunting stories, photos and videos with a growing list of companies. Due to the popularity of the program, TAPS team members have signed contracts with at least two talent agencies, Escape Artistry and GP Entertainment, to conduct their performances at lectures, conferences and public events. TAPS also entered the radio broadcast venue with a three-hour weekly show called Beyond Reality, hosted by Havas and Wilson. The radio program deals with topics in a wide variety of fields such as cryptoesology, spirituality, opology and ghosts. The show features guest appearances from other TAPS members and special guests such as John Zepis, Rosemary Alan Gilley, Chris Fleming and others specializing in certain areas. Stationary supernatural writer Jeff Belanger and radio host and author Tim Weisberg were surrogate hosts. The show also aired simultaneously on Spocky Southcoast, the broadcast from the Mount Washington Hotel in New Hampshire. New episodes air every Saturday from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. Eastern Standard Time, though may sometimes skip a week because of the possibility of hosts ingoting other ventures. On March 3, 2010, the 100th episode of Ghost Hunters aired, featuring their investigation into Alcatraz Prison. The two-hour special featured a live studio audience with Q&A footage, hosted by Josh Gates of Destination Truth. The special also featured the GHI team, the winning contestants of the Ghost Hunters Academy, and Craig Piljjan, the creator and executive producer of Ghost Hunters. On June 2, 2011, Syfy renewed ghost hunters for an eighth season, marking it as the longest-running reality series to air online. On February 15, 2012, Grant Wilson announced that he would be leaving the cast of Ghost Hunters to focus on his personal life. In a statement he released, Heuz responded: I will miss working with Grant on a daily basis, and I am grateful for the level of dedication and expertise he has brought to our field. I can't imagine having a better partner all along - both on the show and from off. Grant and I, along with our spouses and kids, we're all like one big family. While I fully support his decision to move on from the series, this long-established membership - as well as our business partnership - will continue off-camera in the years to come. Wilson then also left the beyond Reality radio show and was eventually replaced by J.V. Johnson, the frontman/editor of TAPS Para-magazine. On June 7, 2016, Havas announced that the Ghost Hunters would finish the Syfy season, with season 11 being the last season produced. On August 1, Wilson was publicly reunited with Havas for the first time, as a guest on Beyond Reality. On June 26, 2019, it was announced that the ghost hunters would be renewed. That same year, when Wilson came back with a new team. The 12th season, initially reported as 20 episodes (which later aired as 11 with two specials, with season 13 premiering later[13]), first aired on August 21, 2019 on A&E and ended on October 30, 2019. Researcher and executive producer Grant Wilson confirmed before the episode on October 30, 2019 that ghost hunters will return in 2020 for the 13th season of several unspecified episodes. On February 18, 2020, it was announced that season 13 will premiere on April 8, 2020. Criticism of ghost hunters has attracted various critics and skeptics, such as Joe Nickel of the Skeptical Investigative Committee, skeptical author Lynn Kelly, James Randy and Benjamin Radford. The skeptical analysis of the Supernatural Society (SAPS) was founded with the intention of restoring and disproving parts of the series. In June 2008, Ghost Hunters won the Truly Terrible Television Award (TTTTV) by an independent investigations group for acquiring pseudo-science and superstition for its audience. [18] During the seven-hour Halloween show, live on October 31, 2008, at least two events occurred that visitors examined: one occurs when lead investigator Grant Wilson pulled his jacket collar three times; All the while one of his hands remained by his side, leading opponents to claim he was pulling a hidden wire. It happens again at some point where Haws touches Wilson's back and his collar goes down again. Another occurs when a seemingly bodiless voice tells the hunters, you're not supposed to be here. Critics claimed the sound sounded like it had been streamed from an external audio source. As far as the test went, Wilson and Hoss defended themselves, stating that everything in the show was real. In a 2013 interview with The Expos, Wilson stated that their TV contracts would contradict them from forging evidence on the show. In January 2019, Steve Gonzalves of Ghost Hunters, along with Chris Smith and Mike Goncalves of the TV show Haunted Cities, hosted Death Ship Ghost Hunt as part of a weekend of ghost hunting in North Carolina. Supernatural scholar Kenny Biedel wrote an article for the Skeptic Enquirer that referred to the criticism this event received, noting that it could tarnish the reputation of this historic site. According to researcher Benjamin Radford, most wind hunting groups, including TAPS, make many methodological mistakes. After watching episodes of ghost hunters and other similar shows, it quickly becomes clear to anyone with a background in science that the methods used are illogical and unscientific. Anyone can be a ghost explorer, failing to consider alternative explanations for the anomaly... Phenomena, given emotions and emotions as evidence of ghost encounters. Improper and unscientific interrogation methods, for example, using unproven and unproven methods Sampling errors, inefficient use of recording devices and focusing on location history... And not the phenomena. In an article for the Skeptical Inquirer, Radford concludes that ghost hunters should care about real scientific inquiry: I believe that if spirits exist, they are important and worthy of being taken seriously. Most efforts to explore ghosts so far have been flawed and unscientific - and, not surprisingly, useless. In a New York Times article on ghost hunters and TAPS, Radford argued that the group and others like it lack scientific rigidity and mischarge people into thinking their homes are haunted. [23] Editing the series has been studied, such as non-recorded activity and findings not supported by evidence in the series specifically. Tools are used in ways that are not proven effective, or in ways that have been shown to be ineffective, such as infrared thermometers that are claimed to detect cold spots in the middle of rooms when such tools are only able to measure the surface temperature of objects. [17] Techniques with thermal imaging cameras, Geiger counters, electronic sound phenomenon, and EMF detectors are used with little or no explanation as to how the techniques proved to provide evidence of ghosts or other entities. There are concerns that the devices are being abused, such as the notation of Benjamin Radford's article for the Enquirer Skeptic: You may own the world's most sophisticated thermometer, but if you use it as a barometer, your measurements are worthless. Just as using a calculator doesn't make you a mathematician, using a scientific tool doesn't make you a scientist. [24] Popular culture and ghost hunters helped popularity in psynatural TV and ghost hunting during its original run. [25] [26] For much of its initial broadcast on Syfy, it was the leading supernatural reality show on television. CNN's John Blake said in 2013 that ghost hunters are in the supernatural field what Sugarhill's 'rapper pleasure' is for hip-hop... Havas, Wilson and Ghost Hunters were a parody of the 2009 episode of South Park titled Dead Celebrities. They appeared on a Lit Night episode with Conan O'Brien, the 2008 episode of Ellen DeGeneres' Tonight Show, an episode of The View in 2008 and an episode of The Tonight Show starring Jimmy Fallon. Productions related to spin-offs Ghost Hunters International lead article: Ghost Hunters International spin-off series premieres on January 9, 2008, featuring researchers Rob Demaree, Brian Harnois, Donna LaCroix, Andy Andrews, Shannon Sylvia, and Barry Fitzgerald (who appeared in summer 2007 Ireland episodes of Ghost Hunters) since the beginning, along with other rotating friends from the TAPS family. The format is similar to that of ghost hunters, but includes investigations in various locations around the world. Ghost UFO Hunters Producers Craig Filigan and Tom Thyre published another special all-natural investigation called UFO Hunters (not to be confused with the series of the same name that aired on the History Channel), which first aired on January 30, 2008 but only aired for a single episode. The episode followed New York's Eccentric Phenomena (NY-SP) investigators Olver Kamenchky and Ted Davis, along with supernatural explorer Dennis Anderson, as they investigated an alleged alien abduction case in Cartret, New Jersey, and a bizarre fireball incident in Normandy Beach, New Jersey. The format resembled a typical episode of Ghost Hunters, with much of the show dedicated to the investigation and wrapped up in a review of collected findings and evidence. The pilot episode was rebooted and returned on December 13, 2008, as a special called Ny-Spi Investigates on Investigation Discovery,[31] but was not seen as an ongoing series. Ghost Hunters Academy Main article: Ghost Hunters Academy On October 23, 2008, TV Guide reported that Syfy will launch a spin-off of the show called Ghost Hunters: College Edition, which will feature co-eds in ghost hunter roles. The series was later named as the Ghost Hunters Academy and began airing on November 11, 2009. The series features Steve Gonsalves and Dave Tango leading a group of amateur ghost hunters through various investigations. [33] The later series Kindred Spirits Lead Article: Kindred Spirits TAPS Members Adam Berry (also the finalist from Ghost Hunters Academy) and Amy Baroni left the series in 2014 to start their own show, which was subsequently won by Kimfred Spirit, which began airing on Destination America and TLC in 2013 and aired four seasons so far, and later moved on to the travel channel. [34] [6] Ghost Nation Main article: Ghost Nation (TV series) After the decision to sever ties with Syfy in 2016 negotiations to start a new series of failed ghost hunters, Haws, Gonsalves and Tango eventually came to decide to focus on efforts to help local researchers at the national level and start a new program, Ghost Nation. The show has been on the travel channel since October 2019. [35] [36] [37] Home Media Season Editions - The following format (columns) is considered for deletion.
